Health Debate Flares

By DAVE McINTOSH

HALIFAX (CP)-Some came not to praise Allan MacEachen-but to try to bury him.

However, the 46-year-old federal health minister declined to lie down and instead declared his candidacy for the leadership of the Liberal party.

Nova Scotia Liberals Friday night gave native son Mac-Eachen a testimonial dinner and an ovation.

But just hours before the din-ner, at which Mr. MacEachen declared his candidacy, the news spread here that Prime Minister Pearson had stated that universal medical care insurance, scheduled to come into effect July 1, will be reviewed by the cabinet in light of provincial attitudes on the problem. Many provinces oppose implementation of medicare this

At the same time, Eric Kierans, former Quebec minister of revenue—and health—went on television here to say Canada cannot afford universal medicare at this time.

Each Shiver Means More to Quiver To Paper? Policy Statement

WASHINGTON (WP) - The federal housing administration here has warned its women employees that mini-skirts can cause fat legs. Health officials say that girls who wear the mod-styles in frigid winter weather must also have fat

In a bulletin to female workers, the FHA health division said:

"Warning : Skirts and health.

"Because of the prevelance of mini and micro-skirts in the agency, we feel it necessary to call attention to the health (and beauty) probelms that this fashionable garb presents in cold weather

"The legs of young women Tunder 35 years of age) respond quite rapidly to exposure to cold temperatures. The bodily response is a quick build-up of successive layers of fatty molecules under the skin areas of the thighs, knees calfs and ankles of female legs." Once a government-girl gets fatty molecules around her legs, FHA warned, she is probably doomed to walking around on pillars, rather than

"Such fat buildup is almost impossible to remove without extraordinary exercises that most women find difficult too maintain," it noted.

In addition to the loss of feminine beauty, the agency said, short skirts can also promote frostbite and chills.

Other agencies have considered some sort of ban or at least a stern warning, about the dangers of mini-skirts this time of year. But officials are apparently afraid it would violate employees' rights or the freedom of information act

LSD Blindness Cases Spark Probe in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) The case of six Pennsylvania College students, permanently blinded by staring at the sun during an LSD "trip" is spurring federal search in the United States for other such incidents.

Shortly after The Associated learned Friday of the Pennsylvania case, federal health officials announced a state-by-state survey to discover whether other persons have lost their sight while under the influence of the powerful hallucinogenic drug.

Federal officials had known of the case since last November but a spokesman said no study was undertaken earlier because of policy questions involving federal and state jurisdictions

The six college students, identified only as juniors at an un-named western Pennsylvania college, suffered total and perblindness last spring manent while staring at the sun in an

IN ANNOUNCING HIS FORTHcoming resignation from the a candidate for the prime ministership, Trade Minister Winters has made clear his objection to some government policies and his inability to feel "compatible" with these as well as with the leadership contest. With his withdrawal from participation, Mr. Winters resolves a difficulty which will face all the cabinet ministers who become candidates for the nation's highest office. That is the split personality which each minister brings to the contest, for he must appear before the public not only as a cabinet minister upholding agreed government policies, but also as an individual contestant with his own ideas of what the government should be doing-and presumably will do if he becomes leader.

The present federal cabinet, like all cabinets everywhere, inevitably contains disagreements among its members. It is inconceivable that all ministers would agree on every aspect of the government's programs. What emerges as government policy is the product of discussion in cabinet, in which dissenting opinions compromise on various points, and completely irreconcilable views are held in abeyance. Having formulated a policy, the cabinet presents it to the country as the intention of the whole government. Cabinet solidarity forbids public dissent by a minister.

But now such ministers as wish to seek the Liberal party leadercabinet and his intention not to be ship and the office of prime minister must overcome the dilemma that faces them. On various mattersmedicare, national defence, foreign policy, attitude to provinces, financial policy, and so on-each minister presumably is bound to voice publicly only the official government view. Yet as a contestant for the country's leadership he obviously must tell the public what his personal stand is on the various questions and what he intends to do if chosen. There can be no pig-in-a-poke selec-

> In this light, the candidates who presently hold cabinet positions should be unleashed, say a month before the party leadership convention, and freed to state candidly what their views are on the public questions of the day. Only thus will they be able to compete with the unfettered candidates, such as Mr. Kierans, and publicize the reasons why they believe they should be chosen. This, of course, will prove highly embarrassing for some, particularly when the time comes, after selection of the new leader, to put the cabinet back together again with a facade of solidarity. But the situation is unavoidable. There are times when it is necessary for a man to state his political policies clearly, regardless of consequences - and when he is asking to be made the leader of the nation is one of them.

German Electoral Reform

ON THE BASIS OF RECENT state election successes and the present means by which a party can gain representation in the Bundestag, Germany's National Democratic Party (NPD), the so-called neo-Nazis, may enter the national parliament in elections of 1969.

This is a matter of deep concern to Chancellor Kurt Georg Kiesinger who appreciates the damage NPD representation would inflict on West Germany's image abroad. In consequence, he has announced plans to study ways of varying the election formula so as to exclude the NPD. The problem is complicated because the necessary measures could also de more widely acceptable minority parties.

At present, half the Bundestag is elected by direct majority vote. The remaining seats are apportioned to parties on the basis of their percentage of the total vote, provided they poll at least 5 per cent of the Observers have grounds to believe that the NPD will achieve more the falsity of their politics.

than the minimum in the elections next year. Hence the Kiesinger announcement of electoral reform studies by the government.

But while any party smacking of Nazi characteristics is anathema to the government - as well as to Bonn's friends in other lands -Germans still desire a system that permits representation by minorities, such as the Free Democrats, outside the followings of the two major parties.

This is the problem to which the chancellor says the coalition of his Christian Democratic Union and the Social Democratic Party will address itself in the immediate future-a problem of great delicacy. The objective is to make the Bundestag democratically elective for approved parties but inaccessible to groups which are vetoed for ideological or other reasons. That appears to be a risky undertaking with inherent dangers for democracy itself. Perhaps a better method would be to educate the potential voters for Nazi-type parties to a realization of

Until it makes up its mind on that point Mr. Snifkin is doing nothing in his own interests except, of course, to gather convention delegates, campaign funds and promises popular with the elector-

The last thing that any candidate could want, Mr. Snifkin tells me, is to be prime minister. But no patriot can resist the nation's call and about ten men at least have heard it loud and clear, even if the nation hasn't heard it so distinctly. In Mr. Snifkin's case the call came suddenly without warning.

To be exact, it came on New Year's Eve. The intellectual conversation at Mrs. Alfred Noggins' home, where some

THE newspapers have managed, so of us were seeing the old year out with far, to suppress the name of the win-Snifkin that the nation was really sick and needed saving.

This knowledge struck him with a blinding light just after midnight. It was a religious rather than a political experience. Like his competitors, he doubted his fitness for office at first and therefore tested it against a broad spectrum of public opinion. The opinion, as in all similar cases, was unanimous. Everyone present at Mrs. Noggins' celebration agreed that Mr. Snifkin must make the supreme sacrifice and Mr. Snifkin took it like a man, as you would expect. In fact, we agreed on everything that night. National unity was in full nocturnal flower, a touching sight for any

The same thing occurred simultaneously in various groups across the land. Everywhere the decision was unanimous The public had spoken, unmistakably, All the candidates got the message. Mr. Snifkin's message, however, was quite different from the rest. He alone realized immediately that his qualifications were

Uncommitted Uninformed

As the last Conservative convention proved so dramatically, the nation's great need is a leader completely divorced from any previous government or any knowledge of federal affairs that might prejudice him in advance. Mr. Stanfield, solemnly munching a banana the leadership because, in Mr. Snifkin's judgment, he was free of association with the Diefenbaker government. In the same way Mr. Snifkin is free association with the Pearson government which has never heard of him. You can't be freer, or better qualified than that. Some candidates may claim equal freedom but Mr. Snifkin's claims are superior. For he is the only candidate who never voted Liberal in his life. Even such silent, enigmatic men as Messrs. Martin, Sharp, Hellyer and Eric Kierans cannot say as much for themselves. No convention delegate will accuse Mr. Snifkin of a lingering Liberalism. He and no one else is beyond suspicion. Indeed, he is even less supect than Mr. Stanfield, who candidly admits a minor Conservative bias.

Moreover, Mr. Snifkin is just as uncommitted as Mr. Stanfield on every issue of national policy, and noncommitment can go no further. Wisely following the Conservative leader's example, Mr. Snifkin has issued a series of public statements to set forth in detail the issues on which he is uncommitted. The list seems to cover everything but the newspapers, naturally, have not printed it, though they slavishly print all that Mr. Stanfield refuses to say. This doesn't disturb Mr. Snifkin in the least. He is making no deals with the press or anyone else. He will not promise cabinet portfolios, senatorships or foreign embassies to his friends. He has hired no smoke-filled bedroom in the Chateau Laurier, lacking the necessary funds. But the nation undoubtedly has found its man, if Mr. Snifkin can find the airfare to Ottawa.

Unfortunately, that is still doubtful. On New Year's Eve, as I remember it somewhat vaguely, we pledged unbounded support to our candidate but the enthusiasm has waned since then. None of us is offering a contribution to Mr. Snifkin's expenses lest we be accused of trying to buy up the next government. It is not a question of finance. It is a question of morals and this is a highly moral neighborhood. The Money Power and the Big Interests may operate elsewhere but they have no leverage

In the Bag

Mr. Snifkin, I must report in honesty, has made one small concession to the new canons of politics established by Mr. Stanfield. As essential stage properties he will carry in his pocket a bag of hananas when the convention opens, nothing more except, perhaps, some very

Even with these credentials it is possible, human folly having no limits, that Mr. Snifkin will be defeated. If so, you may be sure that he will accept the verdict like a good sport, without complaint or recrimination, and join the Conservative party, taking his last hannas with him where they are appreciated. The other candidates, he assumes, can do no less.

FROM LONDON

Dark Skies Over No. 10 Downing Street

PRIME Minister Harold Wilson may some day see the sun shine again on 10 Downing Street, but at the moment the pall overhead is unbroken. One day the headlines tell of can inet in-fighting over post-devaluation cuts in government spending. The day after, the front pages are full of Mr. Wilson's libel suit against the New York Herald Tribune. This arose out of the publication of gossip about the prime minister in an article last fall, at the time of his successful libel challenge to a pop group circulating an offensive cartoon. Mr. Wilson could be excused if he yearned for a return to his old suburban Hampstead cottage, of which his wife spoke nostalgically in a recent, revealing television interview. (A writer of poetry who admires Byron and Tennyson, she turned a fishy eye on the freewheeling stage satire of Downing Street life entitled "Mrs. Wilson's Diary." She said it was "pretty poor stuff" upon which she could greatly

Mr. Wilson's stock in the country is at a new low and it isn't unusual in influential London circles to hear him referred to simply as "That Man." Nothing about him is above criticism. not even the prime ministerial office. It is a measure of the alarm created by devaluation that every sort of remedy has been privately entertained, even government by a strong man like

Truce Proposals

Publicly, there have been proposals for a political truce between the two major parties, for a coalition government and for the direction of the economy by leading industrialists, either sitting in the cabinet as in the U.S. or appointed to powerful administrative boards. Behind all these proposals is the feeling that Parliament and its government have shown themselves incapable of meeting the grim economic challenges facing Britain.

It has been argued variously that politicians are not equipped to handle economic technicalities, that political considerations inhibit them from pushing through necessary but unpopular measures and that political debate distorts reality and in the economic sphere can lead the public to expect too much.

The idea of a Gaullist-style strongman has not gone down at all well in this cradle of parliamentary democracy, but the other schemes cannot be dismissed out of hand. It has been intriguing to note how quickly a number of ambitious, powerful and quasi-political figures have taken up the banner of businessmen's government. The chairman of the government-run national coal board, Lord Robens, has said Britain should be managed like a giant corporation, and has added for good measure that he, rather than Mr. Wilson, would likely have been prime minister had he not left the parliamentary Labor party in 1961 to take up his current job. Aubrey Jones, a former Conservative minister now directing the up-and-coming prices and incomes board, has plumped strongly for more of the same in other areas of government. The Labor-oriented publisher Cecil King has also been front and centre, disclosing that he turned down a Wilson offer of a cabinet post, warning that democracy is on trial and promoting cabinet appointments on the American pattern.

It has been strongly argued that businessmen's criterion of success, profit, is not the criterion of success in government, which requires very particular talents. Nevertheless, the evitable remarks about prime minister (or president) Robens, Jones or King are made only half in jest. For its part, the government has displayed some unease about the way the wind is blowing. While still chancellor of the exchequer. James Callaghan condemned a tendency to cynicism about Parliament in general and the activities of a "potentially sinister" group of businessmen in particular.

This was later identified as the "industrial policy group" headed by Sir Paul Chambers, former chairman of the giant Imperial Chemical Industries. The IPG comprises a number of leading industrialists who have indicated growing concern with government economic policy and have apparently discussed alternatives. They disclaim any sinister intent, but don't disguise their misgivings about the parliamentary system. In the words of one: "There's no alternative to democracy, but it's ruddy

Heath Rejections

Conservative leader Edward Heath has poured cold water on proposals for a political truce or a coalition, and enthusiasm for the latter is notably lacking among the majority of observers. But the consensus seems to be that it could happen if there were a further economic deterioration and particularly if there were another devaluation.

Much depends on what happens within the Labor party in the coming months. The right-wing, or moderate, element of the party has increased its power with the appointment of Roy Jenkins to the exchequer and may be in a position to override the left on key issues. The current battle within the cabinet over government spending cuts could end with a decision to cut social security costs to less than the left will accept.

The upshot might be a revolt by the left, opening the way in time of crisis for their secession or ejection. The centre of the party might come together with the Tories, or part of them. This would be along the lines of the National government of 1931, and is definitely a last resort. The Times has called the National government the worst of the century. The belief that coalition is the sure way to encourage extremist minorities, who may form the only opposition, The old fallen giant now will become has only been strengthened by the experience of Germany, where the "grand coalition" is haunted by a growing nationalist movement.

When it went down it took out a old. It could have been one of its own progeny. With it, one side of an old maple tree was stripped of its limbs.

If one examines the old tree he will see that it had been dead on the inside for many years and only a small ring of sap wood held it in place. It has bark that is very thick and shows fire scars of many years ago.

The inside wood has been attacked by termites and they have made it almost honeycombed. The carpenter ants have invaded and set up a colony. Also some of the beetle family have found this a fine place to live.

As these creatures set up their Best Man for the Country Or Best Political Machine?

Liberal leadership race begins to heat up, the opinion makers of this country are individually and collectively coming to the conclusion that the contest is too important to the Canadian future for the Liberal party to be left quietly to go about its machine way of picking Lesier Pearson's successor.

It should not be, they feel, the man with the best political organization who automatically emerges as the winner, but the best man for the country, the politician who in his person embodies the most advanced thinking about the seminal issues of our time.

Whether their apprehension will be felt by party professionals is hard to know, but Pierre Berton's new book, The Smug Minority, due to be published in mid-February, is not so much about politics, as about the kind of country Canada should become.

THE GALLUP POLL

Tory Lead Holding; Grits, NDP Down

By The Canadian Institute of Public Opinion

While some of the icing which adorned the Stanfield-Tory vedding cake last October seems to have been picked away, the happy couple still looks good to more Canadians than does any other political combination.

October's national Poll recorded a sensational jump of 13 percentage points in the strength of the Tory party following the September leadership convention-a jump which not only put the Conservatives ahead of the Liberals, for the first time since the 1965 election, but put it ahead with a healthy nine

Today's Gallup Poll shows the Conservatives still ahead of the Liberals, but by a slightly narrower margin of six percentage points. Interviewing, on which these findings based, took place just prior to the announcement from Prime Minister Lester Pearson that he planned to resign from the leadership of the Liberal party early in the new year.

The shot in the arm which the Conservative convention gave the electorate is best shown by the following table which records the response a carefully-balanced cross-section of voting-age Canadians have given to the question: "If a federal election were held today, which party's candidate do you think you

Quarrels Can't Solve The Indian Problems

By ART STOTT

West Coast seems more hopelessly tangled the birds' nest I created trying to put the nylon line on the spinning reel I received for Christmas. I'd like to think that the problem can be straightened out the way the line has been, with patience and expenditure of man hours. Maybe it can The 1968 version of misunderstanding seems to have started with Art Laing's surprisingly unpolitical candor. I have a high respect for Mr. Laing. To me he seems to be a very sincere, perhaps too sincere, public figure who has tried to make clear, in simple, unequivocal language, the position he takes as minister in charge of Indian affairs on what done to improve the position of Indians in

As I read his remarks of the beginning of the year, he says that Indians will have to overcome an inclination to self-depreciation, accept the current ground rules of the acquisitive society and dig in to assist in the solution of their own problems. No solution can be effected, he seems to be saying, by actions of the white population or government agencies alone. The Indians can be given adequate help only if they help themselves.

Unhappily, he used a couple of words which have been seized upon to indicate a lack of sympathy on his part with Indian aspirations. The words were "greedy" and "self-pity." And he has not been impressed by a brief submitted to his department by Vancouver

The "trigger" words and the criticism of the brief have set some of the more vigorous spokesmen for the Indians on the warpath. In an effort to emphasize the mistreatment of Indians, one spokesman has referred to pregnancies occurring among young girls at a residential school—suggesting that the children brought to such institutions are fair game for marauding males. This, in turn, has roused almost tearful protest from some of the girls at the school, who say they are lucky to be are in school to acquire an education and feel that the remarks about pregnancies and sex activity are a slap in the face to them.

All this makes very sad reading and, to me, seems to be piling misunderstanding on misunderstanding, creating hostilities where they are not justified and making the ultimate solution of the Indians' problems that much more difficult. Heaven knows they're complex enough under the best of circumstances. In my more idealistic youth I thought

The new year is only two weeks old and integration through enfranchisement was the already the Indian situation viewed from the answer. This would—and still does for the few Indians who want to take the step—give the Indian legal status as a full Canadian citizen without special consideration for him as an Indian or control by government as a ward. It does not, however, remove subjective discrimination which is unrelated to legal status. And most Indians do not want to be nchised because that course leads to > strong sociological ties. Beyond that, Indians have excellent grounds for criticizing the white community for its adherence to the rules of an acquisitive society. Theoretically, the Indian concept of sharing with his fellows seems more desirable on ethical grounds.

But the acquisitive society is here and its rules are observed by the majority of Canadians. That majority has the moxie to make it work and survival depends on the ability of the individual to adjust to the This is all the more significant because the natural resources on which an arlier age of Indians depended for subsistence are now inadequate to meet the needs of the rising Indian population. They can't live on the fish that aren't there to catch. They can't eat the game which isn't there to shoot. anyhow, they want more than mere food and primitive shelter.

There is a brutal answer to the conundrum inherent in the Indian situation. It rests in the abolition of Indian status, allowing them to utilize at their own discretion the lands which they own and admitting them to the benefits of general Canadian citizenship. But this is a course which does not appeal to many India Were the contrary the case, they would have ome enfranchised.

The process would impose the old law of survival of the fittest-and the fittest would be those who could adjust successfully to the society current in Canada at large.

The idea is repugnant to a large number of thoughtful Canadians because they feel that most Indians are not equipped to compete in the present-day, largely urban, struggle for existence frequently called "the rat race."

The best answer, it seems to me, will be provided when Canadians receive a practical, eptable, reply to their question to "What can we do to help you to help yourselves?" And since there are nearly a quarter of a million Indians in Canada-each of whom is an individual, though we tend to that fact occasionally-it might be difficult to select the right response. In the meantime, we're getting nowhere by present quarrels-unless they serve the useful purpose of emphasizing the fact that people axious to help, and they include both Indians and non-Indians, are individuals with different

At the same time, the eight economists who have been working on the special report about the effects of foreign investment on Canada will probably see their effort become an important issue in the leadership contest. Walter Gordon, the project's sponsor, anxious to have contender declare his stand on economic nationalism.

The report-a thick, 300page typescript—is now in the process of being printed and translated. Copies will be circulated to all cabinet ministers and some senior civil servants early next week.

As previously noted in this column, the document makes some dramatic but eminently workable recommendations on how foreign-controlled c o rin this country might be encouraged to operate in the national interest.

U.S. Claims

The report complains that Canadian sovereignty has been "unacceptably eroded by the extra-territorial claims' U.S. government on their Canadian-based sub-

The report will be con sidered by cabinet, probably on Jan. 25, and the government will then have to decide whether it issues the document as a white paper, which would imply its collective endorsation of its objectives or merely makes it public without indicating whether it be turned standing committee for further study. If the latter happens (and it's the most likely course of action for a government which does not want to make any serious policy commit-ments until it has a new prime minister) it would then become incumbent on each declare his intentions.

The questions arise from the almost imperceptible audience reaction to a recent telecast of American soldiers piling human corpses like cordwood; dumping, and airlifting, by helicopter and cargo net, the Vietnamese dead.

The scene, on Walter Cronkite's CBS evening news, was described by correspondent Robert Schakne as a problem of sanitation for U.S. troops.

CBS reported only a slight rise in the phone calls that evening; in an audience of perhaps 100 promillions tested the There was similar feebleness of response several months ago to a report from Don Webster, also on CBS, that American soldiers were cutting off the ears of the enemydead for souvenirs.

The excellent reporting of ghastly scenes is not telecast without great agonizing by responsible newsmen at the networks.

Do such scenes accurately reflect American participation in the war? Do they aid the enemy? Are they anti-war propaganda? Does not any accurate reporting of war constitute anti-war propaganda? These are some of the questions TV newsmen ask themselves daily.

But when the scenes are silence ensues. And shown, this raises the more issues of whether the audience is morally numb or the medium is invalid. (morally irrelevant by association). If these questions had commercial value, the networks and their patrons, the advertisers, would have had them researched to the point of uncovering the opinions of researched to the point upper middle-class citizens of Hungarian extraction in New Brunswick, N.J. But the issue is purely

The dominant brain half shows all the highly developed functions of speech of the normal human being. But while the left half seems in some ways function more at the level of an infant or moron, yet in experiments where no speech or "naming" of perceptions is needed, it is capable of a high level of recognition, learning and discrimination.

Grades Get In the Way

By DON ROBINSON

WASHINGTON - Patrick Gallagher, chairman George Washington University anthropology department, has a PhD from Yale, a carrotred beard, and a firm belief that grades are unnecessary, meaningless and ought to be abolished.

He announced to the nearly 500 freshmen in his introduc tory anthropology class that for the semester just ending he will submit to the registrar for every one of them a grade of A. They applauded.

The thin, 37-year-old, rapid-talking professor said in an interview that he did it to make everyone think about grades. If they really do, he said, they will come "in-eluctably" to his conclusion that grades ought to be abolished—at GW other colleges and universi-

Even 7 Days Crew Not Helping Show

By ARCH MacKENZIE

WASHINGTON (CP) - A major experiment in noncommercial U.S. broadcasting has finished its first phase and no one in the TV opposition seems shaken.

The consensus is that the new educational network program can profit from a return to the drawing board.

"The hope is to guide commercial TV toward higher quality." observes broadcastquality," observes broadcast-ing reviewer Lawrence Laurent of the Washington Post. "But the bland do not lead the bland."

In short, after seven prime time Sunday night broadcasts, the Public Broadcasting Laboratory is still floundering. a force in search of a format.

It is taking a holiday for Laurent gests it is a "respite which is badly needed and one in which the men who run this experi-ment ought to try to find some sense of direction, purpose or inspiration.'

PBL, as it's called, has $10,000,000 from the Ford Foundation to spend on proover a network linking the 100odd non-commercial TV stations around the U.S.

PENETRATION It has shown flashes of provocative penetration in areas where the three major commercial networks are reluctant to tread, or cannot induce sponsors to pay them

Critics complain that it has also been rambling, tech nically clumsy, verbose and flat on other occasions.

This despite a staff seasoned in competitive TV including some from the controversial CBC production This Hour Has Seven Days. BERYL FOX

Beryl Fox, formerly of Winnipeg and one of the Seven Days hands, has a link with PBL as do some other old CBC people.

Some of the PBL production has simply repeated the kind of TV reportage the other networks may well handle

It has campaigned hard and well for improvement of federal meat inspection, now become law. It has risked become law. It has drawing an anti-war label on

It has concentrated on the Negro problem in the city ghetto, with particular brilliance in a cinema recording of a young Negro soldier back from Vietnam readjusting to the ghetto and to the new radical currents of protest generated there by Black Power agitators.

NOT REPEATED

PBL opened with two anticommercials-one criticizing the higher cost of brand-name aspirin and the other knocking tobacco. But this adventure hasn't been repeated.

It has set up one six-city network to air charges and counter-charges, mainly from Negroes, about police

But, as veteran broadcaster Edward P. Morgan said, it degenerated into name-calling and cliches.

Laurent and other reviewers say a main need for PBL is a tough editor willing to chop

Beep! Beep! The Road-Ram

Staff Writer

After the roar of the crash, the tinkle of falling glass, the distant whine of the police siren and the identification of the dead, there was comic relief on Wojeck.

The story of the crusading coroner's battle with the car barons to improve safety features in cars ended with this message:

"Any similarity to any person living or dead or any organization is entirely coincidental."
Yes, indeed and indeed.

And if the tale of one man's battle to have safety built into every car even if profits have to be reduced should remind one of Ralph Blank's fight with Beep! Beep! car company, well it can't be helped.

'Wojeck is fiction," the announcer intoned. Shocking fiction it was.

The hour-long show (CBC Tuesday) tried hard to disturb people and it took 50 minutes to do it.

I was not shocked when the play insisted that car firms hire people to wire-tap, bribe and smear in an attempt to thwart government investigations.

was not shocked into accepting that the recall of cars for defects is evidence of sloppy work, But the item alleging that companies buy the cheapest kind of tire was a bit unnerving. And then when a man's wife and daughter crack up their car because brake fluid has drained away and they bleed to death because a front-end impact jams the doors shut, well it's a different ball game.

It cries for a complete and satisfactory explanation. The sermon didn't convince me that Beep! Beep! car company is a heartless villain. But it did start me thinking and I'd feel a bit better if someone could reassure me about

Quote: "Cleveland can't win if they don't get out of their own end of the field."

Quite true. And it's likewise true that if the Cleveland Browns couldn't get out of their own end and put some points on the scoreboard they couldn't even beat a team made up

He's going to be the prime minister. So you need a man with lots of federal experience, right?"

Like, someone from the cabinet?
"Well, yeah," he said, "so keeping these things in mind it shouldn't be tough to pick the winner. Right?"

On radio this week came this tip-off about the rising cost of parking the family car. A breathless announcer shouting the praises of a department store advised: ". . . plenty of parking . . . up to Put the kiddies to bed. It's a sick flick.

Adults have reported being disturbed for months afterwards. That's their problem. But there's no excuse for TV to make children wake up in the middle of the night screaming.

Where did the censor go? And also how come children are permitted (with adult along) into that weirdo melodrama Reflections In A Golden Eye? This is one Liz Taylor movie that genuinely deserves the Pussy Cat.

Conscious Of The Irony

AS IS, by Raymond Souster: Oxford University Press; 84.75.

Raymond Souster, although he does not earn his living by professional in the sense that he has been deeply involved in Canadian literature for most of his life.

Author of over a dozen books of poetry, co-founder of Contact Press, friend of Dudek, Layton, Scott, and Ann Wilkinson, he is an important part of the literary scene.

This latest volume contains the poems of an essentially civilized man moving around his own city and countryside. He is conscious of the irony of the human condition as it is revealed in the metropolis and conscious too of his previous Memory plays a more important part than usual in these poems, written in some cases for, or about, the dead.

The collection is not an entirely satisfactory one because, competent though Mr. Souster is in the forms of his choice, mere competence is not enough to lift the reader

I do think that precision and an eye for detail are fine things, and that when they are used to an end which is more than description they are justified.

"Seven Days of Looking at a Rubber Plant" and "The Farm out the Sydenham Road", as well as shorter pieces such as "My Brother, Dying" and "Scoudouc: the Lost Year" are admirably

But there is, to my mind, an overload of banality, a certain discursiveness, a strain of sentimentality running through the book in spite of the good things in it. How can one seriously, earnestly, publish lines such as "one golden mushrooming sky-burst of love?" The image is beautiful in itself, but the language does not fit its force

This is an interesting volume, and a sensitive one, but misses out on being really exciting.-G.V.D.

The Search for Identity, Canada: Postwar and Present, by Blair Fraser. Doubleday. 1967.

Reviewed by Peter Murray

The transition from journalism to history is not an easy one to make.

Blair Fraser, long-time Ottawa editor for Maclegn's Magazine, who was chosen to write this sixth volume in the Canadian History Series covering the postwar years, is only partially successful.

Largely this is because the events he deals with are not long enough off the front pages to be given the imprint of history. But even more diffi-cult, "The Search for Identity" proves too nebulous a theme to come to grips with.

Too many chapters are simply a replay of the major news stories of the 1945-65 period with a little "kieker" paragraph at the end trying to tie them into the theme.

Nevertheless, Fraser has written a very readable and entertaining book. After Gerda Munsinger can anyone say that Canadian affairs are dull?

If he lacks the insights and occasional brilliant writing touches of a Bruce Hutchison or Peter Newman, Fraser in never carried away into wordiness by the power of his pros as his two contemporaries sometimes are Fraser's writing is lean and unadorned. He is alway incisive and never boring. Close to the scene during thes fascinating years, he is able to bring in anecdotal touche that give his narrative a lift.

He puts life into some of the names that dominated th

Fraser has a keen eye for hyprocrisy and pricks deftly a a few distinctly Canadian conceits:

We prided ourselves during the post-war period on our open-door immigration policy and compassion in helping to empty some of Europe's dreary refugee camps, but we weren't always being altruistic, sometimes the motive was simply cheap labor;
We became a member of the North Atlantic Treaty

We tended to adopt a lofty moral perch in both the Korean and Vietnam wars that hasn't always been matched Foreign policy is one of the areas where Canada's contradictions have shown up most glaringly. The striving to be a respected "middle power" sometimes has been based on pure isolationism, as it was under Mackenzie King.

Of our desire during the latter war years to establish ourselves as the "linch-pin" between the United States and Britain Fraser observes:

Canada was trying to get in between the great powers, all right, but not to mediate. The object was to make sure that the great powers did not dispose of our affairs to suit their

With some of this new-found wealth we created one of the most advanced social welfare systems in the world.

What has this to do with the so-called search for identity? The dust jacket says Fraser's book "seeks to answer the question that Canadians ask themselves as often as their neighbors do: what is a Canadian?" I'm not so sure our neighbors really care and I doubt that Fraser has thrown much more light on this unanswerable query. If there is anything distinctive about being a Canadian it must be our continuing obsession with the question. The two most vital facts of Canadian existence are the WRITTEN FOR CHIL-DREN, by John Rowe Townsend, Ambassador, $5.95.

THREE CENTURIES OF CHILDREN'S BOOKS IN EUROPE, by Bettina Hurlimann. Oxford University Press. $9.00.

> Reviewed by Judith Terry

People interested in the history of children's books have not been too well served up to now.

Except where it overlaps the main fabric of English literature, in books like Robinson Crusoe and Treasure Island, it is a subject which has no place in the ordinary literary survey.

The standard work on English children's books has always been Harvey Darton's Children's Books in England, but since this is not easy to read and somewhat out-ofit is a book for the specialist.

John Rowe Townsend, himself a children's author of some note, has recently produced a brief history, Written for Children, that, while not replacing Darton, does pro-vide a useful account for the general reader.

And although you may find more comprehensive comment in the weighty volumes diligently put together by American experts on the subject, I doubt if you will find anything more readable than this little book with its apt and amusing illustrations Townsend's choice of anecdote is lively and he relates intriguing snippets of biography, like that about biography,

Thomas Day. Day was an ardent believer the educational theories of Rousseau, and besides writing a book in support of them, attempted perseveringly to practice what he preached.

Unable to discover a wife who exemplified the Rous-seauesque ideals—"in her dress and diet as simple as a mountain girl, fearless and intrepid as the Spartan wives and the Roman heroines"-he brought up an orphan girl with the intention of marrying

Townsend's effort to avoid any academic dryness in his text does result in some brassiness of tone—Day was niel's Alice "a demure little blonde"—but he is lively, accurate and enthusiastic.

He avoids the major pitfall inherent in a study of this kind, that of merely compiling a list, by constantly making critical comparisons and evaluations.

It is true that when he reaches the 1930s the massive quantity of material available does bog him down a little.

Having summarized Rose-mary Sutcliff's fine novel Dawn Wind (a good historical novel for the teen-ager), his final comment on her over-all achievement tails off into vagueness, "There is meaning in this kind of history."

On the whole, however, his critical discussion of many well-known children's books is enlightening, and he manage to plead new estimates of old books with sympathy and discernment. I wish someone would produce a similar on American children's books.

Three Centuries of Children's Books in Europe by Bettina Hurlimann is a much more costly production than Written for Children. The European view which

Mrs. Hurlimann represents, as opposed to the English or American, is refreshing. There is a section on Heinrich Hoffman and Struw-

Struwwelpeter is full of fearful punishments inflicted upon children who were guilty of minor misdeeds. The episode of Little Such-a-Thumb who has his thumb cut off with a tailor's shears is the most horrific.

Mrs. Hurlimann maintains that the small reader is not terrified by the book because it achieves in the original illustrations "a kind of symbolic hyper-reality."

Certainly in some children's books violence is too far from reality to be affecting. Take Edward Lear's: There was an Old Man who screamed out Whenever they knocked him about; So they took off his boots, And fed him with fruits,

And continued to knock him about. It is of this kind (though perhaps some psychologist will one day throw up his hands in horror at the sinister implications of taking off the old man's boots). To defend Hoffmann in this way, when his intention was so obviously to correct child-ish bad habits, is hardly a

Her chapter upon the influence of comic books makes rash assumptions about the nature of the comic strip and its inferiority to the film cartoon, and when she moves on to discuss the influence of comic books on young people, it is quite obvious that the evidence she cites is insufficient and out-of-date.

The absurdities of Superman really should not cause him to be classed as a "horror comic" figure, and it would be interesting to know the source of the statement that "the vocabulary of American children is very much smaller than that of European children of the same age."

Comics are not specially desirable reading material, but to suggest that they have had a "devastating influence" (apart from being demonsmate the child's ability to preserve his integrity through a variety of experience,

Why is "fail" a dirty word in our society?

Why, as a verb, does it carry as much of a connota-tion of disgrace as "to lie" or "to steal?"

After all, failure doesn't inevitably imply mental or character weakness. It can happen to the best people for a variety of reasons

One cannot read the biography of the most successful people in any walk of life without being impressed by the failures they have had to overcome.

Nor can one escape the conclusion that their success grew from their failures, the one feeding the other as the fallen leaf feeds the new tree. Most artists, scientists and skilled people of various kinds would probably agree that they have learned far more from their failures than from But in our society we worship success because it means material "having;" we despise failure because it means "having-not."

So the do-ers and the gifted people are conditioned to an abnormal dread of failure and in many schools children are about with euphahedged misms which do nothing to prepare them for subsequent confrontation, which then becomes all the more brutal.

To this end for instance it is considered desirable to avoid competition in music and drama festivals so that no child or group should feel that has lost or failed the contest.

This principle ignores the fact that competition is the stuff of life. We are all in constant competition every step of the way and unless we learn to profit by our losses and keep level-headed over our wins, we are likely to make a rather dismal show in the long run.

Youngsters More Realistic

Fortunately however, the majority of children are far more realists than some of the adults who study them.

They know exactly the meaning of their team's getting into an honor performance or getting an "A" or ance or getting an classification in some group endeavor.

And to provide musical groups in a festival class with the rating, Superior, Excel-lent, Good, is just a question of semantics in the young mind which is perfectly aware that any three words would be the same and that Good, Adequate, and Fair would probably be a more realistic

There is however, an unpleasant aspect to competitive festivals, especially where trophies are at stake. And that is that they tend to become predominently pothunting excursions.

This is pretty much what happened in the music and drama festivals of pre-World War II days and I am the first to admit that the climate created was not conducive to artistic health.

As recently as three years ago when the Dominion Drama Festival — a pot-hunt if ever there was one - took place at McPherson Playhouse, the point was well illustrated.

Despite the shortcomings of the adjudicator, there cer-tainly would have been a far less acrimonious atmosphere if the best thises and best thats with accompanying trophies had not added exasperation to frustration.

one where participants performed and watched others perform while a panel of experts conferred and wrote adjudications that would subsequently be handed to the performers without public pronouncements.

The failures and the successes would be recognized on all sides, the element of competition would be present, but in a proportionate manner and an atmosphere of shared experience.

The point is that it is not the fact of failure but the refusal to recognize the irrefutable fact that skills come

BIT OF A SHOCKER

Ultimate in Extremes At Vancouver Show

From Jan. 10 until Feb. 4 the Vancouver Art Gallery is showing two quite contrasting artists' work.

The exhibition includes 47 paintings and 20 color drypoints spanning 43 years of the life work of David Milne, and a 10-year retrospective of the highly controversial Toronto painter Joyce

If one set out to find two people who have a greater difference in their views of life, attitude art, con-rn for crafts manship, and sensitivity to subject matter, you could not find more extreme opposities than

David Milne and Joyce Wieland. About all they have in common is their Canadian birthplaces. Milne (1882-1953) died almost four years before Joyce Wieland started exhibiting. This present show is the first major display of Milne's work ever shown in our part in

This is also the first major retrospective of Wieland's work. It affords us a unique opportunity to evaluate her progress and contribution to Canadian art and to test the premise that, as Shirley Clarke claims:

"The art of Joyce Wieland has a consistency of power, joy and beauty which will secure her place with the great artists of this century... an art created in gentleness and that warm light which is uniquely and eternally female."

I would confirm her feeling of power. But it is the power and impact of shocking bad taste and craftsmanship that is so outstandingly amateurish and childish, in the regressive and retarded sense of childhood, as to make a critic preathless with the impotence of criticism.

No first year art studen would pass any course in any school or art department with such disregard for form, color, or even framing. The whole show is an affront for a public gallery to seriously display, especially considering real sensitivity, concern for form and subject, and the genuine gentleness, warmth obvious importance to 20th Century art of the other artist David Milne.

Wieland's "Tragedy in the Air" or "Plane Crash" of 1964 is a part of her comic strip series of plane and ship tragedies, complete with childish drawing, bad compo-sition, obvious literary story telling, and inept presentation.

"The Clothes of Love" is a cloth hanging done in 1960-61. The really atrocious craftsmanship would be amusing if not seen in the context of a gallery like the Vancouver

Perhaps the most revealing and autobiographical work is "Sanctu Spiritus" 1964. It is a small white box, painted Pepto-Bismo pink inside. It contains a bouquet of plastic flowers, plastic doilies, a small plaster pink cat, a doll's double bed complete with pillows, and two cheap portraits in frames of Queen Elizabeth that are photos taken from her image in the Wax Works. The whole is illuminated by a small blue

"The Space of the Llama" is a hanging of plastic bags containing among other things some exposed movie film and a "whooppee cushion." The latter is one of those joke shop novelties sold to embarrass the unwitting victim. In this case it is appropriate to the noise that comes to mind in the viewer.

A small painting entitled "Kiss has a rather sea-sick green background for a smear, rather like chewing gum on the underside of a theatre seat, a gray blob mashed in the centre of the painting, and just so you will not miss the point, it has an arrow directing your eye to its excrescence.

Perhaps the most interesting items in the Wieland melange are the quilts. These are large constructed wall hangings, like the crazy quilts of our grandparents, only in more contemporary materials like nylon, plastic bogs and polyethelene sheet.

One of the more amusing is entitled "Confedspread" which is a putdown of our centenary efforts. It is a series of stapled plastic bogs with hits of stuffing, gaudy colors and a few Canadian flags for decor.

The best, is a large creamon-white effort with quilted forms rather like a city plan seen in a snow storm, with the only accent a small red cross near the centre. It is "For Father Lavalle" which is a cryptic title whose meaning escapes me.

Some odd moody effects, mainly of color, are seen in "Green Lady" 1958 and the flower-power images of "Hal-lucination" 1961. Both suffer the above mentioned

In 1964 Joyce Wieland in commenting on her sequential paintings and her attempts at film making, which charitably will not discuss, said:

"Part of the power here (New York, where she now lives with her artist husband Mike Snow) is the tradition of sensationalism and vulgarity... I think you assimilate it in your work.

Assimilate it she has, including digestion and regurgitation. Unfortunately, rather than being stimulated by it, she has been overpowered by David Milne in contrast, has definitely not been defeated by his environment, but has sensitively recorded his very personal pleasures of and insights into the countryside around southern Ontario and during the First World War the European towns and environs.

Among the beautiful little color drypoint etchings the one of "St. Michael's Caone of "St. Michael's Ca-thedral" is perhaps the most typical in its senstivity of line and color. It is astringent without being sparse and evocative without sentimentality.

Milne's home area where he taught school, and spent so much time is faithfully rendered in "Boston Corners" a gentle landscape in blues.

The very crisp buildings are a joy in "Ripon: High St." This was painted during the war near where he

Its careful play of blues, greens and deep reds are held in place by fragments of grey. It York Hotel and Front St., the title is "Water Front", and it was painted about 1910.

The other landscapes are impressive for their range of treatment, recording of seasonal differences and fresh quality of contemporary feeling that seems so much less tired and hackneyed than the work of the Group of Seven.

In summary, the viewer could not find a greater contrast or difference in attitude than those presented by

SMALL STAKE

By JACK BEASTALL

The old Christmas tree has served its intended purpose and now, stripped of its glory lies in the back garden awaiting disposal. But its useful days are far from ended, for distrees are sought by experien ced nome gardeners who Jack know their their value as protectors for precious dormant roots. As mentioned in previous columns, the practice of covwith soil or ashes is disastrous in a climate like ours. The mild temperatures and extended periods of rain soon turn a mulch protected plant a miniature compost neap. Yet we do have temperatures during brief spells in January and February that could very well damage those precious border-line plants we insist on growing, and which cannot be grown in any place Canada that is beyond the influence of the Pacific

DO THE JOB

These plants require some form of protection when the temperature goes below average, and nothing seems to do the job quite so well as branches of conifers.

This is where the discarded Christmas tree can be pressed into further service.

The branches are chopped off the main trunk and forced into the soil around the plants that need protection.

Placed at the correct angle, three branches will form a tent. Air can pass through the foliage, sunlight is filtered to prevent unwanted rise in temperature, and a certain amount of rain is prevented from falling directly on the dormant crown. The longest branches will often be suitable for a windbreak on the exposed side of small shrubs which suffer wind scorch in cold NE gales, while the shortest branches criss-crossed over groups of slightly tender

LONG-LASTING

A surprising thing about these cut trees that have been in water during their term as house decoration, is the length of time they will retain their foliage in a green condition when thrust into wet soil. Quite often it lasts into March or later.

This fact is something every home gardener should carefully note, for it proves the length of time that can elapse between the loss of roots on a conifer and the browning of the foliage.

It means that a cultivated

The Beautiful Hazards of Leap Year

By PETE LOUDON

Poor John Eldridge and

Poor John Eldridge and his buddies at the University of Victoria are walking a tightrope for the remainder of 1968.

This is LEAP YEAR, How can they concentrate on their studies when traditionally, the young lovelies on campus are concentrating on them.

That's the legend of Leap Year anyway. Every day is Sadie Hawkins' Day.

In reality John may be quite safe. At Uvic right now there are about 2,250 male students compared to about 1,750 female students—about four boys for every three girls.

The lads in arts and sciences are safest from the perils of early matrimony. Girls are outnumbered there two to one. John is in first-year arts. Even if he slows down he might not get caught. Now if he were in education, he'd find the shoe on the other foot.

Maybe, after gazing on the current year's crop of co-eds, John is thinking of switching to the greener fields of teaching. Whatever it is his mind is on, he's not getting much studying done.

One thing he needn't worry about, there's no penalty for saying no. But in 1288 in Scotland, the law imposed a fine on any man who refused a woman's proposal of marriage in Leap Year.

Other interesting facts about marriage:
In Canada the average age of a man at marriage is 25.4 years while the average woman weds at age 22.7.

A larger percentage of the population in British Columbia is getting married each passing year. In 1962, those ware 6.7 mars 1962 there were 6.7 marriages per 1,000. In 1963 this rose to 6.9; in 1964 to 7; in 1965 to 7.6; in 1966 to 7.8, and it's estimated that in 1967 it was 8.3.

The B.C. department of vital statistics reports that more and more marriages are being performed by civil ceremony. In 1962 it was 11.6 per cent and in record, 14.8 per cent.

These marriages are performed either at the Parliament Buildings here or at district registrar's offices throughout the province.

the most recent year of

Finally, and this might be of comfort to John and his ilk, the vital statistics people say they can see no indication in their records that Leap Year makes any difference to the totals.

A random sampling of John Bartlett's Familiar Quotations indicates the poets and philosophers spent more time attacking marriage than praising it.

John, dreaming at right, might consider these excerpts:

Another John, John Heywood, in the earliest collection of English colloquial sayings (1546) wrote "Look ere ye leape."

Cervantes, in Don Quixote, "Marriage is a noose."
Lord Byron, "All tragedies are finished by death; All comedies are ended by a marriage."

Samuel Butler, "A man's friendships, like his will, are invalidated by marriage."

William Congreve, "Tho' marriage makes man and wife one flesh, it still leaves them two fools."

George Bernard Shaw explained perhaps why people marry anyway—"Marriage is popular because it combines the maximum of temptation with the maximum of opportunity."

directly on our route North to Hawaii (2,200 miles distant) and since it was the last morsel of land that we should sight until we made Hilo, I found it impossible to heed the rumors of ghosts and the legend of its being taboo to the living. Indeed, such tales only added to the attraction of the place.

Accordingly we anchored how-on to the incoming ocean swells, paying out full scope on Powindah's anchor chain so that she rode comfortably and safely under the shadow of the land.

When dawn broke the following morning we lowered away the ship's boat, a seven foot skiff, and struck out for were able to shower. While white tropic doves circled overhead we explored the path of the stream up to point where it danced down through a narrow gorge.

Picnic Lunch

In this enchanted spot we ate a picnic lunch; until this moment I found it hard to believe that any tribe of people had dwelt on the island.

'What's that over there?' asked Pat. She was pointing to a section of the stream's bank that had caved away. looks like a carved figure."

"Probably a rock."
"No, I'm certain, it's a figure of some kind, the same as we saw in Hiva Oa." I sat up. Stone tikis were

"Don't drop it," squealed my delighted crew. Together we examined it, marvelling at our good fortune, turning the statue this way and that, dusting the dirt off; the back of its pedestal was chipped other than this the piece was in perfect shape.

It stood more than three feet high and from a distance looked almost comical with its distended stomach and grin ning jaws: its eves were the

After wrapping the tiki in towels we rowed it back out to Powindah.

When we were within ten feet of the boat two shark fins rose on either side of us, moving so quickly that their fins made a distinct sound as they cut through the murky

"No need to be frightened," I said. "Remember those fishermen told us there were lots of sharks about this place."

'Do You Think . . .?'

"Funny that we should see them now, just when we have this statue. Do you think . . ."
"Don't be silly. We have enough things to worry about without adding superstition to the list.' The two sharks kept their distance but once we had boarded Powindah and set the statue below decks they actually began circling the boat. It was difficult to ascertain their size, but each of the raked fins stood almost two feet. Towards evening time they both disappeared. "I'm glad they're gone," said Pat. "I was beginning to feel nervous."

"We'll just stay one more night. I'd like to try to shoot a sheep tomorrow. That would give us fresh meat for the first day at sea and we can salt down whatever's

We set the statue in saloon, next to the Haida Indian totem pole which had been with us since we began the voyage. The two figures were almost identical in size; they appeared to stare into each other's souls, like men of isolated cultures meeting for

No Sleep

That night there was no sleep for Powindah's crew: the wind failed to die with the sun: instead it hauled around to the North East, forcing giant swells into our anchorage, causing the boat to surge back and forth against her

We stood watch. Since there was no moon the cove was utterly dark, yet filled with nightmarish roaring o breaking surf that exploded less than a cable's distance from the stern of the boat. The sound preyed upon our imagination.
"Wouldn't it be better to put to sea?" asked Pat. "This is rather unnerving.'

"If we made one mistake trying to sail out of here in pitch darkness we'd lose the boat. If we do start to drag we can slip the anchor and come back for it in daylight. In the meantime let's sit tight. In the morning I'm going to take the tiki

"Do you really believe it might have some bearing on all this?" "Who knows? Why tempt fate?"

By daybreak the wind and seas had eased off enough to attempt a landing. Again we wrapped the grin ning god-statue in towels but this time I lashed it into the dinghy, in case the dingy should become capsized in the Reluctantly the Mate stayed aboard Powindah.

With the rifle slung over my back I started shoreward rowing slowly, trying to judge the cadence of the rollers. Then Pat called: "The sharks are back!"

There were three of them swimming along the line of surf. At the approach of the skiff two disappeared but one remained on station and so I pulled back out into the and fired twice at its fin. The monster vanished.

Feeling happier now I again struck out for the landing area, letting the dinghy go in on the first small wave but it broke flat in too deep water for the boat to reach the sand in one rush.

Sucked Back

The runoff was too powerful to row against. The dinghy was sucked back into the line of breakers. Then came a moment of silence and I glanced at Powindah and saw Pat watching and in that second the masts were eclipsed from view by a smooth elevating wall of water as quiet as any mountain yet moving on the dinghy, growing into cliff form, the first tension of white spume gunwales, afraid.

The skiff made it halfway up the breaker. Then blackness. The sensation of lungs trying to burst. The thought of sharks. How would Patricia sail alone? I cursed the tiki.

An eternity later I found myself on the beach next to the overturned dinghy.

When I had coughed the salt free of my lungs I pulled the boat beyond reach of the sea, unlashed, the statue and carried it back to its grave. I buried it completely out of sight.

Perhaps the gods were placated, for minutes later a wild boar ambled down to the stream's edge, well within range of the gun. He provided the best meal we had eaten in weeks.

with surprise and delight that London is still there in winter. About 200,000 will be going over between January and March this year to take advantage of the off-season. It's cheaper to get there and cheaper to stay after you get there, What's more, Lon-don is if anything liveller in

'Come Along And Bring Your Feelies'

LONDON (CP) accent is on spontaneity at a new centre for "with-it" Londoners anxious to indulge their artistic interests.

Officials at the centre, called the Arts Laboratory and established in a converted warehouse, speak in terms of such science fiction gimmicks as "feelies" in describing techniques for selfexpression.

A decade ago Londoners with a yen for radical esthetics joined Sir Herbert Read's Institute of Contemporary Arts in plush Mayfair.
The new generation may find the quaintly decrepit area near Covent Garden market a more congenial setting for leisure-time activities.

McLUHAN'S BIG

That is where the new arts centre open for business early last fall, with Canada's Marshall McLuhan a major source of ideological inspira-

"I showed a film on Mc-Luhan to packed houses from noon to midnight one day recently," said American-born Jim Haynes, who calls himself artistic director of the Arts Laboratory.

"'McLuhan's a very important man-as important as Freud."

A long-time resident of Britain, the 32-year-old Haynes shares this view with other figures in the "under-ground" of Britain's art vorld.

He says his own specialty is "creating situations, environ-ments for other people—I build platforms."

IT'S CASUAL

Most patrons of the Arts Laboratory are in their 20s. The warehouse setting gives the lab a rough-hewn look appropriate to its ideals.

Throughout, the emphasis is on the casual and the improvised. A movie house in the basement has no seats and insists that viewers remove their shoes before entering.

Experimental movies are prominent on the program. Printed alongside the an-nouncement of one offering was a left-wing weekly's comtion cried out for someone to "shovel it up and flush it swiftly down the nearest drain."

TAKE CHANCES

But defying such opinions is the chief function of the underground, as Haynes sees it. Chief characteristic of that nebulous region, he says, is "incredible tolerance and willingness to take chances."

In the theatre, patrons are urged to create their own sensations. "Bring sounds, colors, feelies, etc.," says one invitation.

Feelies can be any gadget, even smoke bombs, that can puzzled inquirer was told.

IT'S MY VIEW .

By Ernie Fedoruk

To all who knew him, the death of Nick Sawchuk last weekend came as a big shock. His personality was such that employees who worked for him regarded Nick more as a personal friend than as an employer.

Nick was not an obtrusive publicity seeker. He had a special fondness for hockey, but all sports found him considerate and obliging. He was always ready to purchase advertising in any worthwhile program.

In his quiet way, Sawchuk contributed greatly to the sports

There can be no finer tribute than the one Nick's employees offered this week. The employees in his dry-cleaning establishment have donated a trophy to perpetuate his memory. It is a trophy - now in the hands of the Victoria Sports Council — that may well become one of the most prized awards made in the district's athletic circles. The Nick Sawchuk Memorial Trophy will not necessarily be handed to an athlete or coach. According to the stipulations of the donation, it can be presented to anyone who, during the course of a year, has made a worthwhile contribution to sports in any capacity.

It might go to a trainer or stick-boy, a program advertiser or a sponsor, or to a staunch fan .

Because of the scope, it should be a cherished award. While it might have embarassed him, I think Nick would like it that way.

Expansion, in recent years, has been the popular pasttime in baseball, football, basketball and hockey. Inter-City Lacrosse League executives may try it themselves this weekend.

The dominant question at a meeting in Vancouver Sunday will be a Seattle request for admission into the league with Victoria Shamrocks, Vancouver, Coquitlam Adanacs and New stminster.

A Victoria executive has indicated Shamrocks have "no objection" to Seattle's entry.

He added that "Victoria hasn't heard too much about the application" because "the Mainland teams have a habit of holding little meetings amongst themselves.

"As far as we know, it might be 'cut-and dried' before we

One of Seattle's entry conditions is that each of the four teams release two players to the new club. With both Jack Showers and Billy Gray working on the Mainland, guess which Victoria players might be claimed . . . a supposition that does not sit too well with Shamrocks. Loss of both would leave a big hole on defence.

If that does happen, don't be surprised if Larry McNabb and Barry Ashbee wind up in Irish uniforms. Both are playing pro hockey at the moment.

Chances of getting Ashbee to return to Victoria, where he won all-star lacrosse acclaim three years ago, are quite bright. He didn't turn out last summer because, back operation, Barry felt he might be drafted by one of the National Hockey League's expansion teams.

What makes it more interesting is the fact that Barry's team - Hershey Bears - are scheduled to play in Seattle and Vancouver during the first week in February

If they want Barry, that's when the Shamrocks will back him into a committment corner.

Bad news does not always travel fast. Only this week Archie McKinnon learned, in a note acknowledging Christmas greetings, that Ray Daughters, whose star Washington Athletic Club swimmers lent stature to swimming meets at the Crystal Garden in the years before, during and after the war, died late

And during the war he brought up Al Patnik, Ohio State's all-time great springboard artist, for shows that packed the Garden for the best diving exhibitions ever seen here.

BITS AND BRIEFS: Victoria tennis player Theo Booker has ticked off Austalia and now is touring New Zealand with considerable success ... She recently won the ladies' singles title at the Nelson provincial tournament ... After competing in several more meets in New Zealand, Theo will head for Mexico before returning home ... Familar face arond town is Tommy Molyneaux ... A partner of Stan Leonard's in their caddying days, Tommy was the head pro at Edmarus in their Country Club for about 13 years . . . He tried California for about three years before deciding to relocate in Victoria . . . Molyneaux now works at CJVI with Gorde Hunter, whose golf game needs all the professional help it can get . . .

under way, a program will be a must just to tell the teams apart—never mind the players! . . . Some Coffee Macs will be Labatts and Coffee Macs will have a strong semblance to the University of Victoria Vikings . . . VIKINGS HOLD FIRST

Brawling Mars Hockey Action

Friday's Vancouver Island Hockey League argument between University of Victoria Vikings and Victoria Stockers was a fight-for-first affair. And "fight" best describes overall action in the Sports Centre doubleheader. Vikings turned back Stockers' bid for a share of the lead by clipping the Victoria club 6-2 in a rough, brawling battle. There

The U.S. Golf Association last year decreed one cleaning per green for amateurs and continuous putting.

The pros declared the one-cleaning rule would discriminate against early starters because the ball would pick up grass cuttings, sand or other debris because of the dawn dampness. VOTED THIS WEEK

The PGA executive committee voted this week for the tw rules deviations.

Arnold Palmer, the world's leading money winning pro, declared: "I'm happy to see they kept things as nearly harmonious as they did.

"General conditions unde: which we play dictate that we not follow the two rules. We play under extenuating conditions. I think most touring pros

It's Adventure Time For Bargain-Hunters

It was Saturday auction time and parking was scarce anywhere near the Fort Street auction house. It's the best weekend entertainment since they closed the farmers' market. It's a weekly treasure hunt that costs nothing unless you make a find. And even then you might multiply your invest-Auctioneer Wilf Lund, 20 years in the business and far too busy to know what's in all the boxes of odds and ends which arrive to go under the hammer, says, "There must be something there worth investing in.

"Two or three dealers have left bids."

The antique dealers and used book dealers and second hand store dealers come to the Saturday auctions from as far as Nanaimo. They try to be inconspicuous. They have secret signs for bids. But many veteran auction-goers get to know them. They think that if they can buy an item by going one bid higher than a dealer, they must have a bargain.

Often they do. In a box of books there may be a rare edition. Under the dust there may be a valuable painting. One jug in a box of crockery might be a real antique.

"If you weeded out all these treasures you'd spoil the appeal of the treasure hunt," So he stands back and lets

The searchers for antique furniture usually attend the Tuesday night auction when larger items go on the block. Prices offered for old broken down love seats and the like suggest everyone is doing home upholstery.

Hairspray for Purses In Mini-Sized Cans

By Penny Saver

Everything is mini these days. There are mini-skirts and mini-cars, and an article I read recently was advocating mini-schools! My teen-ager is a mini-fan and I have put up with her mini-skirts for a year or two now. Everything she has is mini and made to go with minis. One of the latest is mini-purses (far better looking than the suitcases she longed to carry a few years ago), that hold almost nothing. Combs and compacts have to be bought in a small enough size to fit this purse, and even such a tiny thing as a tube of lipstick has lengthened out and thinned

Now there are tiny tubes of hair-spray to fit in these tiny purses. Scarcely an inch in diameter, these are decorated in "mod" designs with bright stripes and patterns. One can costs 69 cents. These cans may not hold a great deal, but they are perfect for emergency touch-ups. I bought one for my teen and she was thrilled. She was a bit amused, too, when I borrowed it the next day to take in my evening bag to a party.

Teens are big business these days and one of their biggest spending areas is recordings. My children have a lot of money tied up in their collections of the Monkees, the Beatles and the Rolling Stones and they are very forgetful when it comes to cleaning them. I have bought a little device that is an inexpensive way to ensure that they aren't grinding all of that dust into the record and the needle. It is a brush made of goat hair that attaches to the tone arm. Because it goes on the record with the can't forget it. This brush also drains the static electricity off the record as well as picking up dust. It sells for 49

Whenever I dust I take a few extra moments to preserve those records further by wiping them clean with an anti-static record cloth. Made of a tough foam, this 49-cent cloth just needs to be dampened and run across the record. It picks up the heavier dirt that the brush leaves behind.

If you would like to know where I found these items, please

The secret of beautifying the complexion is said to lie in the saturation of the skin with a new type of tropical moist oil. The skin takes on an immediate healthy bloom as the finy lines and blem-ishes are gently smoothed away. This saturation treat-ment with the moist oil of Olay is recommended by skin care consultants, who advise its daily use as a powder base to give the complexion day long beauty. ONLY ONE HOST LIKE MANUEL?

Antonio asked his neighbor S Manuel, "How many enjoyed that chicken and rise I saw you preparing for dinner?" "Well, said Manuel, "there was my Y father's fatherin-law, my brother's father-in law, my father-in law's brother-in-law, R and my brother-in-law's father in-law." This surprised Antonio in-law." This surprised Antonio, who hadn't seen even one gues arriving or departing from Manuel's house. And, indeed none had: for Manuel was himself all of the figurative persons he described. How could

Prince Rupert Bid Studied

Bv Alaska PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — Gov. Walter J. Hickel of Alaska said Friday that every consideration will be given to a proposal to have Prince Rupert as the northern terminus of the new Alaska State ferry system to Puget Sound.

He said in a telephone interview from Juneau that the proposal made earlier this week by William H. Murray, Social Credit MLA for Prince Rupert, "very interesting and we'll ertainly give it every consideration.

CUSTOMS WORRY

"However, there are certain things that have to be considered, including the customs situation. We also have a factor in that the Coast Guard declaration making the waters between Ketchikan and Puget Sound into lakes, bays and sounds so the ferry could be operated on the route specifically prohibits us from going into Canada."

Murray said Friday these roblems could be solved. 'The problems mentioned by the governor do not appear to be insurmountable in view of the fact that there should be little or no difference between ferries from Ketchikan docking here and those on the Puget Sound service utilizing identical services for docking and customs," he said.

SAME TRANSFER

Mr. Murray said passengers or Alaska could transfer to the existing Alaska service here in the same manner as they had in the past from the Queen of Prince Rupert.

Professor Appointed To Boards

A specialist in resource management at the University of Victoria has been named to two national agencies concerned with research into water supplies. Dr. W. R. Derrick Sewell. associate professor of geography and economics, will join the National Advisory Committee on Water Resources Research, established recently to advise the federal government on allocation of funds in this field. The 20-man committee includes representatives from the federal and provincial govern-ments and from universities.

A second appointment places Dr. Sewell on the Universities Council on Water Resources, a U.S. group which previously had no Canadian membership.

As well as serving on the council, he will join its task group on research. The first ouncil meeting for him will be in Washington later this month. "The U.S. agency co-ordinates miversity research costing about $60 million a year—10 times all the water research being conducted in Canada." Dr. Sewell said.

"The U.S. government spends about $134 million annually in this important field, which is just coming into its own in this country." Dr. Sewell, a former governeconomist in Ottawa, came to Victoria in 1966 from FULFORD HARBOR-For a community of only 500, Fulford Harbor has a little bit of everything: a ferry landing, a coffee shop with a skylight, a knight (Sir Philip Livingstone), a church with a blood-red roof, a wingless airplane, and a resident cartoonist.

The cartoonist, Art Simons, lives with his wife Margaret, an arts and craft teacher in her spare time, and three children in a rented home overlooking a wooded TV repair

The rented home is only temporary (a nearby A-frame is gradually taking shape) but the TV place is permanent. Simons describes it in a book of his cartoons released this

"About 300 years ago our local TV repairman forgot to take his Christmas tree down. It's still there in his shop and it's now about 100 feet high and 10 feet wide."

That's an exaggeration of course, but of such is satire composed and Salty (published by Driftwood Weekly Press at Ganges) is a satirical look at the Gulf Islanders.

One cartoon depicts "the fast ladies of Ganges." the who recently got caught speeding their little darlings home to their bowls of hot, nourishing gruel. Simons shows them in a typical "Canadian" car, a Yamoto Canadien (who says the twain shall never meet bumper to bumper?) followed closely by a police car. The senger brags: "Fastest run of the day—8.5 seconds!" Simons, a native of Ontario, taught art in Vancouver before coming here a couple years ago.

He's had several successful showings of his paintings, mostly sensitive, representative watercolors, in that coffeeshop with the skylight. He also does contract sign painting for an Alberta oil company.

He created Salty to exemplify the atmosphere of life on the Gulf Islands and through the eyes of the hoary old character, flays funnybones in the weekly Driftwood. According to publisher Frank Richards, Salty also appears in other newspapers, "published in less favored Salty says: "Heck, that was just the Queen of the Islands. Wait till we meet the Queen of Victoria, the Queen of Vancouver, the Queen of Kelowna . . ." A seasick passenger moans: "No disrespect, but I can't stomach all this royalty."

The lack of sewers, the new school at Ganges ("the site is so steep if a student opens a wrong door he instant dropout"), old-timers who resist change, all get their licks from Simon's wicked pen and brush.

Oh yes . . . about that wingless aircraft. Seems the owner likes to start up the Second World War relic once in a while. It annoys Fulford residents but it's a bit of a tourist attraction. Simons suggests the "keep off" sign is handy to stand on while peering into the cockpit.

Salty's frau chides him for telling tourists it had its wings shot off while bombing the north end of the Island.

Simons has plenty of virgin territory to rake with his barbed brush—that church with the red roof like a Saskatchewan barn, for instance.
Fortunately, Salty—in book form—promises to become an

As long as he does the shaking with the good of the city foremost in his mind that will be all to the good. But all too often in the past his statements have been geared for their publicity value rather than for the common good.

In his inaugural address Mayor Stephen appealed to council to forget past differ ences and get down to some solid co-operative work.

Let's hope his words did not fall on deaf ears.

With the inaugural behind us we should be able to look forward to a steady upswing of activity from city hall.

The last few weeks have been dismally dull with a

It isn't good enough to chat calmly about "lots of time" to get the project going. What need is a decision on how the houses are going to be designed, how they will be built and what the rent structure will be.

The answer to that lies with provincial government, but that is no reason why the city should sit around sucking its thumb.

While that city official is down at the legislature he can also try and prod out of Premier Bennett just what he meant some months ago when he pledged support for a convention centre if it was built on a regional basis.

Health Debate Flares

By DAVE McINTOSH

HALIFAX (CP)-Some came not to praise Allan MacEachen—but to try to bury him.

However, the 46-year-old federal health minister declined to lie down and instead declared his candidacy for the leadership of the Liberal party,

Nova Scotia Liberals Friday night gave native son Mac-Eachen a testimonial dinner and an ovation.

But just hours before the din-ner, at which Mr. MacEachen declared his candidacy, the news spread here that Prime Minister Pearson had stated that universal medical care in-surance, scheduled to come into effect July 1, will be reviewed by the cabinet in light of provincial attitudes on the problem. CHIMNEY WILL SWALLOW ITSELF

Victoria's Grand Old Lady won't blow her stack after all. She'll swallow it.
The 165-foot chimney belonging to the Empress Hotel will feel the bite of a steel clam next Saturday morning. Starting at the top, the giant machine will chew chunks from the chimney and drop them inside.

In this way, more than 250,000 bricks will fall into an the base and be trucked away for storage at the CPR wharf on Belleville Street.

"In effect, the chimney will swallow itself," said William Mattison of Mattison and Patterson Ltd., who have contracted to pull down the chimney. The firm considered other methods, such as smashing the base and falling the stack with guide ropes, like a tree. But the swallowing process is considered the safest.

Demolition of the chimney will begin at 7 a.m. Saturday and may last seven hours. It was built in 1929 and its weight is estimated at 300 tons.

Health Debate Flares

By DAVE McINTOSH

HALIFAX (CP)-Some came not to praise Allan MacEachen-but to try to bury him.

However, the 46-yearold federal health minister declined to lie down and instead declared his candidacy for the leadership of the Liberal party.

Nova Scotia Liberals Friday night gave native son Mac-Eachen a testimonial dinner and an ovation.

But just hours before the dinner, at which Mr. MacEachen declared his candidacy, the news spread here that Prime Minister Pearson had stated that universal medical care insurance, scheduled to come into effect July 1, will be reviewed by the cabinet in light of provincial attitudes on the problem. Many provinces oppose implementation of medicare this year.

At the same time, Eric Kierans, former Quebec minister of revenue-and health-went television here to say Canada cannot afford universal medicare at this time.
